

Jackdaw (Corvus monedula)

Status: Common breeder

Current trend: An adaptable corvid, Jackdaw has carved out a comfortable niche for itself in both urban and rural habitats. The breeding population seems stable, but little data is available to ascertain whether or not it may be increasing slightly. There are notable gaps in the map e.g. NS 31, which is more likely due to lack of observer coverage than absence of birds.

Follow up: Detailed work, needed on exact numbers and trends, could be obtained by regular counts at selected urban and rural sites.
